and Hugging. The Hudson Register deals humorously with a question of grammar as follows: "A searcher after truth writes to us, Which is grammatically correct,' to say 'The house is building,' or 'The house is being built;" 'The street is paving,' or 'The street is being paved?' There is a wide diversity of opinion upon this subject, but we incline to favor 'is being built,' for the following reason: Suppose you wish to express another kind of an idea, would you ly, for instance, 'Johnny is spanking,' or Johnny is being spanked?" The difference to you may seem immaterial, but it is a matter of considerable importance to Johnny; and it is probable that if any choice were given him, he would suddenly select the former alternative. You say, again, that the 'missionary is eating.' Certainly this expresses a very different and much pleasanter idea than the form: 'The missionary is being eaten,' and the sensation is very different for the missionary, too. We have consulted several missiquaries about it, and they all seem to think that the two things are somehow not the same, no matter what the grammarians say.

"But it is to be confessed that there are occusions when the difference in the form is not so marked. You a sert, we say, that 'Hannah is hugging'-which, by the way, would be a very improper thing for Hannah to do; it would be positively scandalous, indeed. Precisely a similar idea is conveyed if you say, 'Hannah, is being hugged,' because it is a peculiarity of the act that it is hardly ever one-sided; there is no selfishness about it. And it is the same with kissing. 'Jane is kissing'-and her mother ought to know about it if she is-is just exactly as if we say, 'Jane is being kissed;' and the sensation is the same, although none of the grammars, by a singular inadvertance, mention the fact. It will not be necessary, however, for our correspondent to attempt to prove these last mentioned facts by practice. He must syntax for him, or any one else.
